COBBLED STREETS

Our resource database was created in partnership with Cobbled Streets (www.cobbledstreets.org)

Health equity refers to the goal of achieving equal access to treatment, and resources in healthcare regardless of race, ethnicity, disability, sexual orientation, and socioeconomic status.

Members of the foster care community are more at risk for disease but have less access to resources that provide treatment for health complications.

Structural inequalities and medical racism affect living circumstances, access to healthy food, clean water, the standard of neighborhoods, and school, and the nature of their interpersonal relationships.

A key element of child welfare is to locate services and trauma-informed personnel experienced in dealing with these challenges to improve foster children's physical and mental health.
